

RESULTS FROM JUNE 18, 2011

Today was to be the second of our volunteer days. Unfortunately, the weather continued to be uncooperative. A broad band of violent thunderstorms was headed directly our way from the north as the day started. The front was very sibile as it arrived as a double line across the sky. Given the radar, the students stayed at our field lab while staff secured the plastic with additional blocks.

Within minutes, the sky went from the above to the below....

We waited out the heavy rain, winds, and lightning – and then given the forecast of storms all day long, we dismissed at 9:30.
